

From the Flag & Cross:

COVID Whistleblower, Military Vet Suggests What's Really Behind Food Plant Fires

The outbreak of damaging fires at U.S. food production plants in recent years has generated headlines and plenty of questions.

In an interview posted to the social media website Rumble this week, Dr. Andrew Huff, an epidemiologist with a background in what he described as “bioterrorism and agri-terrorism,” suggested an answer to what’s behind the outbreak.

And for Americans accustomed to living in relative peace and a land of plenty, it won’t be comforting.

Besides being a scientist, Huff’s personal biography bio states he is a combat veteran who served in Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom.

He is best known recently as the former vice president of the research group EcoHealth Alliance and author of the book “The Truth About Wuhan: How I Uncovered the Biggest Lie in History,” which argues that the COVID-19 pandemic resulted from a “genetically engineered agent” leaked from the Wuhan Institute of Virology in Wuhan, China.

That conclusion was considered official heresy in the early days of the pandemic, but the “lab leak theory” has never gone away.

Huff’s take on the destruction at food processing plants in the U.S. and around the world is just as explosive.

In an interview with Emerald Robinson, a journalist with the conservative RAIR Foundation (Rise Align Ignite Reclaim), on her podcast “The Absolute Truth with Emerald Robinson,” Huff said the spate of suspicious fires matches up eerily well with government data he’d accessed while working on his Ph.D.

He said the information was compiled in a document called “FASCAT” or Food and Ag Sector Criticality Assessment Tool. He used the document in later work, which basically amounted to studying a “roadmap to attacking critical infrastructure in the United States.”

In 2019, that data went missing, Huff told Robinson.

Even though the fires have not been attributed to any specific cause, Huff has no hesitation about using the word “attacks” to describe them.

“There’s been a number of attacks,” Huff told Robinson. “I think, globally, there’s been, probably, roughly around 200 attacks. In the United States and Mexico, I think there’s been somewhere between 130 to 150 attacks now.”

When he analyzed the details of the incidents in comparison to the “most critical systems” of the country’s food production, he said, “it’s a perfect match.”

“I had never seen something so predicted or such a strong correlation in my life,” he said.

Do you think that our own government could be to blame for this?
Yes No

Completing this poll entitles you to our news updates free of charge. You may opt out at anytime. You also agree to our Privacy Policy and Terms of Use.

He told Robinson that he reported the findings to the Department of Homeland Security and the FBI, but “never received a response back, if you can believe that.”

It’s important to note that Huff said this was taking place while he was tussling with the government over his refusal to back away from the “lab leak” theory about COVID-19.

“This is while the harassment was going on that I’ve experienced and all the crimes the government is committing against me,” Huff told Robinson.

Robinson, a journalist who has interviewed figures like retired Army Gen. Michael Flynn, was intrigued.

“The coincidences are just uncanny,” she said.

“With so many attacks, by now, wouldn’t the government have found who it was?”

“If there was an effort to do so, and if it’s not ... you know, I don’t even know how to put it. Would they not have found the perpetrator if it was outside of, you know, some coordinated entity?”

Huff was more direct. Though he said he did not think the U.S. government was involved – “I don’t believe that. I don’t want to believe that” – Huff suggested a “coordinated entity” was exactly the agent behind the incidents. The data that was collected, he noted, was not “classified,” so could have been accessed by an individual or group that wanted to follow the “roadmap” for attacks.

“My belief is that a state-sponsored actor, or a group of people ... got a hold of these data and basically working with a number of groups who are aligned against the United States to attack our infrastructure.”

Huff called the agriculture system vulnerable to attacks, both physical and cyber, and said the FBI and the food industry itself has looked into what he called “terrorist attacks,” but with no result.

“If one food facility burnt down, you could say, that was just ... you know, random. If it was 10, you could say that was random, too.

“But the ... targeted nature of these food facilities and how they correlate with these data that were stolen, this is obviously someone who is well resourced doing this, someone who knows what they’re doing.

“They could have generated the assessment or the analysis on their own, independently. I think that would be very difficult and highly unlikely, so there’s definitely a state-sponsored actor or a group of well-sponsored individuals who are doing this.

“It could be both, and they could be aligned.”

This article appeared originally on The Western Journal.

More on Huff from GOP News Feed:

COVID BOMBSHELL...

Dr. Andrew G. Huff, a former executive at the now-controversial scientific research group EcoHealth Alliance, just penned a book that people are going to want to read.

EcoHealth Alliance, as you may know, is front and center in many theories on how COVID originated.

His book, “The Truth About Wuhan: How I Uncovered the Biggest Lie in History,” is sure to ruffle some feathers.

The Lab Leak Theory

Huff is entirely on board with the idea that the virus leaked from the Wuhan research lab.

He stated, “The crux of the book is focused on explaining the beginner function in layman’s terms... but also talks about the times back in the intelligence community and how this whole operation came to be.”

Huff is now encouraging Republicans to conduct a “full investigation” into the origins to settle this issue once and for all.

He stated, “People should question what I’m saying. I’m making big, bold claims, and I’m happy to take that questioning.

“And Congress should launch a full investigation, so everyone can see what the truth is. ”

He has called the pandemic the “biggest failure in U.S. intelligence history.”

Huff added, “Different government agencies had something called the National Pandemic Preparedness Plan. So, I had seen copies of this when I worked in the government.

“I helped prepare a couple of these for different government agencies. So I was shocked that we were not following the pandemic preparedness plans.

“So these lockdowns that occurred-they were simulated and modeled by an organization that I worked with. And it made sense to do it maybe for a week or two and that’s how they initially sold it to people... But under no circumstance did it make sense to keep on prolonging it as long as we did.

“So when you see this happening, and all the actions that they’re taking were contrary to what we understood to be the best policy actions to take. It was infuriating.

“And then with my experience and my knowledge to know that the government is lying about all these things, all the different policy things that are happening, I mean, I felt like I was living in the Twilight Zone.”

Then came the hammer, stating, “Dr. Anthony Fauci continues to lie. He lied to Congress, and he is in damage-control mode trying to protect himself.”

I would say that Huff will make a great witness for Republicans hoping to take down Fauci.