

From the Deepstate Rabbithole.com

She Used Trump and Now it's Clear

Former United Nations Ambassador Nikki Haley said Republicans needed to acknowledge former President Donald Trump failed the party by contesting the 2020 presidential election that ended in a riot on Capitol Hill.

Treasonous RINOs turning on Trump

Because of the chaotic ending to his presidency, Haley said Trump would not be politically relevant in the future.

“I don’t think he’s going to be in the picture. I don’t think he can. He’s fallen so far,” she said. “We need to acknowledge he let us down. He went down a path he shouldn’t have, and we shouldn’t have followed him.”

The former diplomat spoke about Trump in an interview with Politico’s Tim Alberta for a magazine cover story on her political future.

In the exchange, Haley specifically criticized Trump’s attempt to blame his loss on Vice President Mike Pence for certifying the 2020 election in Congress.

“When I tell you I’m angry, it’s an understatement,” she said. “Mike has been nothing but loyal to that man. He’s been nothing but a good friend of that man.” Haley continued, “I am so disappointed in the fact that despite the loyalty and friendship he had with Mike Pence, that he would do that to him. Like, I’m disgusted by it.”

Nikki Haley says MAGA is not relevant anymore

Haley said she was “surprised” and “deeply disturbed” by Trump’s actions after the poll, blaming his lawyers for giving him bad advice.

“Never did I think he would spiral out like this. ... I don’t feel like I know who he is anymore. ... The person that I worked with is not the person that I have watched since the election.”

Although Haley said any effort to impeach the president was a “waste of time,” she argued Trump was already experiencing the consequences of his actions.

“I think his business is suffering at this point. I think he’s lost any sort of political viability he was going to have,” she said, without offering evidence. “I think he’s lost his social media, which meant the world to him. I mean, I think he’s lost the things that really could have kept him moving.”